

Sweet Land of Mine(s)

A play by Philippe Gauthier

An orphanage. Impersonal. Somewhere in the world, where landmines sweet voice can be heard. Leo and Mathieu are ten years old and are missing a leg. Oopsie, their scapegoat, is missing both. But all three have a passion for football that brings them together. Christmas is coming, with its share of gifts and the annual football game against the Red Cross hospital team. Meanwhile, far, far away, Santa Claus is struggling between his wife, his mistress, and orders piling up...

Sweet land of mine(s) is about bombs singing in children's ears.

Sweet land of mine(s) is about children being held hostage by adults' choices. As usual.

It is about war and its consequences. About a sacrificed - and yet playful - childhood. For those children play.

They play football. They enjoy bullying their scapegoat. And they write letters to Santa Claus. In the midst of chaos, hope prevails.

Sweet land of mine(s) also tells about the vanity of our world, about these piles of gifts that Santa Claus is expected to bring on Christmas Day. But will everyone get a fair share ? Definitely not. Some just hope for a prosthetic leg to walk...

Santa Claus and his wife are a couple in crisis. Although they own everything they need, they are on the brink of the abyss. While those children, owning nothing, are just hoping for a better future, which is a rightful claim.

This is what Sweet land of mine(s) is about. The collision of two worlds foreign to each other.

The show shall be funny, because that is how the author wants it to be. It shall also make people wring their hands, like those women on the news who have lost everything, children included. We wish to make those children's voices heard, and allow the audience to witness this distant reality.

This show is an ode to peace. It is a tree growing amidst the rubble.
